Bookstore overcharged students $30,000 to $40,000

Barnes & Noble plans for the future include renovations and a new mailroom

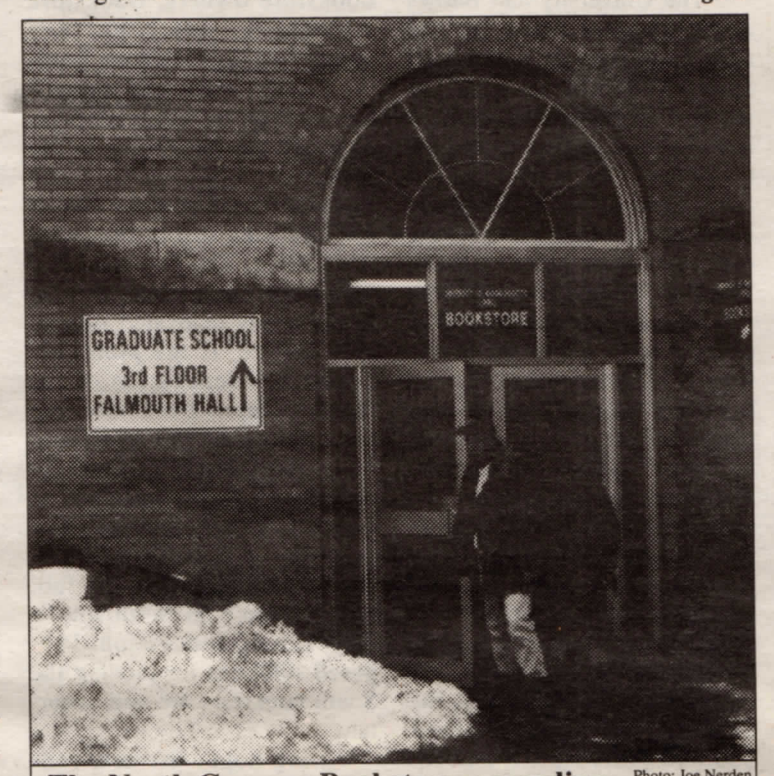

By Alex Maycock
News Staff

On April 21, 1992 Barnes & Noble submitted its proposal to the university to take over the bookstore. Including the one from Barnes & Noble, there were five proposals submitted. Only Barnes& Noble submitted a downtown option. The other four proposals were for on campus bookstores. The idea of moving the bookstore downtown caused a great deal of controversy. Students disliked the idea of having to go downtown in order to buy their books and some accused the administration of being concerned only about getting a high bid on the bookstore. The administration on the other hand insisted they were evaluating all offers in order to make the right choice.

Now, almost a year later, the bookstore is still a hot issue on campus. Two of the reasons that keep the bookstore a controversial issue are, first, that there never has been a written contract between the university and Barnes & Noble--only a verbal one-- and, second, a few business practices of Barnes & Noble. According to Associate Vice Chancellor of University Life Leo King, a contract between the the university and Barnes & Noble has been written and he is optimistic that it will be signed in two to three weeks. Associate Vice Chancellor King assures that the new contract will favor the student body as well as the administration. "When the contract is signed, the issue of the bookstore being moved downtown is a dead issue." Dean King said. The Barnes & Noble downtown proposal on April 21, 1992 would have left the University with only $20,000 annually from Barnes & Noble, instead of the $175,000 it received in the past from Bookstore Associates. Associate Vice Chancellor King stated: " If the bookstore would have been moved downtown, Barnes & Noble would have had to pay rent, they don't pay any rent here."

On March 3, 1993, Vice Chancellor of Research and Development Tom Costello, Associate Vice Chancellor King, Vice Chancellor Bill Maloney of Barnes & Noble Bookstores Inc. and Dave Cunningham, a member of the Bookstore Advisory Committee, discussed many issues concerning the bookstore. The Bookstore Advisory Committee is made up of two graduate and three undergraduate students. The committee also has an adviser and an administrator. The latter position is held by Associate Vice Chancellor King. One of the issues brought up concerned

Three students moved from Bourgeois;

Racial tensions possible cause of fight

By James A. Kimble
News Staff

Recently, personality conflicts between three student residents of Bourgeois Hall resulted in the dispersion of three students to alternate living quarters. After a thorough investigation by the University of Resident Life it was determined that all three students were equally responsible for the events that ensued. Several students in Bougeois claim that the dispute was racially motivated, and a physical assault may have occured.

Director of University Life, Larry Seigel commented "I think that there were elements of racial tension felt by one of the parties and actual physical danger by another. I also feel that this a complex situation where you really can't tell the intent. The person defining what is being said to them has a right to determine whether

Clinton challenges young people: "Answer the call"

Thw White House-

On Monday, March 1, the 32nd anniversary of John F. Kennedy's founding of the Peace Corps, President Clinton challenged young people across the nation to "answer the call to service" and outlined his program to make a college education available to every American.

In an address to over ten thousand students at the Rutgers University Athletic Center in Piscataway, New Jersey, the President invited his audience to join him in "a great national adventure that will change America forever, and for the better".

The President also announced his "Summer of Service" summer leadership training program in which over 1,000 young people will work on service projects with children at risk. The Clinton Administration hopes the summer program will serve as forerunner to a much larger program, potentially allowing over 100,000 young people to pay their way to college through community service.

Under the President's plan, young people could borrow the money for college from the government, then pay back the loan in one of two ways: either as a small percentage of their income over time or through one or two years of community service work before, during or after college.

In his remarks, the President encouraged listeners to "drop me a line" if they were interested in the summer program, or to tell him what kind of service projects exist in their communities and what kinds they would like to see. Following the speech, the President discussed the program in detail during an interview with MTV's Tabitha Soren.

Other members of the administration echoed the President's challenge at various service sites across the country. In Madison, Wisconsin, Vice President Al Gore toured the University of Wisconsin Arboretum, built by young people in the Wisconsin Conservation Corps. Later he discussed the national service initiative with students at a town hall meeting in the University of Wisconsin Union.

Mrs. Tipper Gore visited the Child Day Care Center and the Flagler Home at St. Joseph's Villa, a transitional housing program in Richmond, Virginia then spoke to students from the Jepson School of Leadership, a leadership and community service academic program offered by the University of Richmond.

International Relations Club briefed in National Security Council in Washington

by Jeff Nazzaro
News Staff

A contingent of thirteen members from UMass Lowell's International Relations Club, led by Political science guru Dean Bergeron, left late Monday night to participate in the National Model League of Arab States in Washington, D.C. Twenty-one different groups from twenty-one different schools across the U.S. and Canada will participate. The group from UMass Lowell placed first last year, taking eleven of twelve awards. The International Relations Club has won seven of the last nine meetings in Washington.

UMass Lowell graduate and former IRC member Roger Cressey, who currently works at the U.S. Statehouse on a Presidential Management Intern Scholarship, set up a briefing at the Statehouse for the IRC. The group was briefed by U.S. Mideast Policy Analysts.

Wednesday, the IRC was briefed in the National Security Council by former Assistant Secretary of State Richard Clark. This set the stage for the competition, which the group was to participate in later that day.

For the competition, student groups will be judged on how accurately they represent their pre-selected nation, debating skills, and overall level of preparation by an independent panel of professors and former diplomats with expertise in Middle Eastern affairs.

UML has drawn the Republic of Iraq as the nation they will represent in the competition. SGA Vice-President and IRC member Ken Northrup assessed Iraq as "one of the best countries we could've drawn this year. We will basically be ambassadors and try to pass resolutions that most follow Iraq's point of view," Northrup said.

Northrup has high hopes that the IRC will continue this year the success they have had in Washington in recent years. "Our performance [at the Harvard National Model United Nations in Boston] is a pretty good indication that we should do well," Northrup said.

Representing the UML International Relations Club in Washington will be Northrup, Jo-Anne Scharmer, Andre Kissis, Dwight Robeson, Karen Lavene, Keith Whitney, Brian Andriolo, Brian Twomey, Liz Ring, Julie Thomas, John O'Donnell, Dave Cunningham and Padraic McPherson. Student trustee Keith Neal will also attend as Secretary General of the Conference, which he was voted last year.

Alabama's student sovernment suspended

By College Press Service

The Student Government Association at the University of Alabama was suspended by the administration after a female candidate was attacked in her home.

The attack, combined with the political influence of a secretive student group run by the university's 27 fraternities and sororities, forced officials to suspend elections and close down the SGA until "such time as our students can be assured that the methods and procedures for electing a Student Government Association are free, fair and open," President Roger Sayers said in a statement.

Minda Riley, a junior and a candidate for an SGA seat, was attacked by a man who entered her home on Jan. 31, said university spokesman Keith Ayers. A cross was burned in her front yard in November, officials a Barnes & Noble business practice. A student at UMass Lowell discovered that Barnes & Noble overcharges students by roughly 25 cents for each $10 purchase. A student spending $100 on textbooks, for example, were overcharged $2.50. The Request For Proposals (RFP) which the University sent to all companies proposed to take over the bookstore stipulated a maximum gross margin of 18%. Margin refers to the percentage mark up from the actual cost of a book. The error resulted from a practice where Barnes & Noble raised prices by 25% over cost, and then reduced the price of books by 7% to meet the 18% profit margin called for in its verbal agreement with the university. Bearing in mind that Barnes & Noble has had about $3 million in sales, this can add up to a rather substantial amount. Estimates vary between $30,000 and $40,000. Bill Maloney of Barnes & Noble defended the bookstore, saying that he didn't realize a 25% Gross Margin mark up, followed by a reduction of 7%, wasn't equal to a 18% gross margin. Disputes about the gross margin date back to the on-campus proposal that Barnes & Noble offered in April, 1992. The proposal included a 25% gross margin on books. Nevertheless Barnes & Noble just recently made a $100,000 "goodwill" payment to the University, according to King.

Another issue discussed at the same meeting, had been raised before at one of the SGA's regular meetings. The fact that Barnes & Noble is selling used books at new prices. Bill Maloney acknowledged that Barnes & Noble made a mistake He also assured that if anything similar should happen again, the bookstore is willing to pay a penalty. Dave Cunningham stated that he is very concerned about these issues, especially when they are to the disadvantage to students.

The University and Barnes & Noble have plans for the future. Barnes & noble will spend $250,000 in order to improve the bookstore, and have already hired architects to draw up plans. The mail room on South Campus will be remodeled into a convenience store, selling everything from gum to T-shirts. The South Campus mailroom will be moved to the third floor of the library, above the Media Center. King announced that the new mailroom will have twice as many mailboxes. Now there are up to five students per mailbox. The money for operating the new student mailrooms will have to come from the University. In the past, Bookstore Associates paid mailroom expenses from profits made in the bookstores. Including salaries for mailroom workers, phones, building costs, the expense will come to about $60,000 per year. To pay for these expenses the University will use some of the $175,000 Barnes & Noble has to given back to UMass Lowell. Barnes & Noble will also renovate the bookstore on North Campus. The South Campus bookstore will also need renovations. According to King the South Campus Bookstore is a disgrace, with mice running around in the basement. King acknowledges administration's fault in allowing the bookstore to degrade to such a level, but he also points out that the former bookstore owners, Bookstore Associates, never put any money into upgrading the facility, though they had enough money to do so. There are plans to move the bookstore to the Center for Learning on South Campus, then move the Center for Learning to the Financial Aid Office. The Financial Aid Office will move to Dugan, next to the newly renovated Admission Office, if the plan succeeds. The renovation of the North Campus bookstore, the remodeling of the mailroom into a convenience store and the creation of a new mailroom on South Campus, will all take place over the summer and should be finished in the fall. The bookstore on North will be open during renovation. Proposed solutions for moving the South bookstore are still uncertain.

King hopes the new contract will be made a public document, accessible to everybody. King also encourages students to talk to Dave Cunningham if they have any questions concerning the bookstore.

they're being discriminated against. I believe the use of physical force to protect oneself from bodily harm is perfectly alright."

All three students were allowed to request a new location of residence on campus. Two of the students chose Leitch Hall, while the third chose Eames Hall. According to Seigel, University Police were not involved and had no knowledge of the incident. Seigel also stressed that all three students equally shared the responsibility of what had happened and that they alone could have lessened the severity of the situation. Seigel also added, when asked about the existence of racial tension on campus, "I think that there's really no racial tension, however, I do feel that there is a fair amount of discrimination, sexism which is a large issue, and clearly homophobia, because it's more accepted. Something needs to be done."

said. Riley is white.

On Feb. 1, Sayers, on the recommendation of Vice President Harry Knopke, suspended the Feb. 10 election and the SGA. The SGA functions are now run under the university president's office.

Officials are also concerned about the intimidation and harassment by members of The Machine, a political group comprised of white sorority and fraternity members, Ayers said.

"The Machine has done honest and dishonest things in the past to keep others from winning," Ayers said. "They have used harassment and verbal threats, and it has gotten out of hand."

The organization was founded in 1914, when the SGA was formed, he said. It regularly holds secret meetings. Twenty percent of the university's 19,500 students are Greek, but 80 percent of the SGA's 60 seats are held by Greeks.

Ayers said non-Greek students have felt disenfranchised in SGA elections, so "there has been a malaise about student government." The faculty and most students favor the action, he said.

The Machine has denied any involvement in the attack. The university has also offered a $5,000 reward for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of whoever attacked Riley

Q: Have you ever personally experienced or been a witness to racism on campus?

Larry Seigel
Director of Residence Life

"Working with 2500 students each year lends itself to being aware of the extent to which discrimination exists. [Racism] is very covert here at UML. I believe much is being done and much more could be done."

Gerry Hotaling Ph. D.

The teacher said, "Maybe it's just an Asian flu," implying that the two Asian class members (who were not present) were the only one's who had skipped. Not to mention, this was said in the presence of an Asian student."

Jim Davis FR ART
"Yes. On my first day of employment in the O'Leary library, two UML police officers responded to a call that 'a black man in a black trentch coat, hat and sunglasses was sitting behind a desk.' I was approached in a gruff and arrogant manner. Their was no racial slander per se however, their tone and mannerism made me feel unwelcome in the library. The officers appeared shocked that I was working and acted as if I should be causing trouble."

D-Dens (Michael Douglas), an ordinary man who has gone over the edge is confronted by gang members.

'Falling Down' is a must see.

by James A. Kimble
Staff Writer

'Falling Down ' starring Michael Douglas takes a look at one man's rampant outcome stemming from the disarray of society, crime, and its failing economy that encompasses him. The storyline and base of characters is as accurately current, realistic, and modern day as the morning news.

Douglas' character (D-FENS) is depicted not as an evil man, but rather a man who has simply had enough and is no longer remaining within the reserved norm. Those who are willing to attend this film with an open mind should leave thoroughly entertained with much to consider,which is what I believe was director Joel Schumachers' original intention. This refreshingly original film demolishes any standard of rehashing the infinite number of below average "good guy/bad guy" plots with hunky dory endings that have been dominating the silver screen throughout most of the 80's, and have usually fallen short of anything but dull and uncreative. If one is able to look past the films' violent overtone, which at first is somewhat instigated by just cause, one can find a uniquely original and controversial plot. The beauty of this is D-FENS is easy to identify and empathize with. This is a man who strives for the very same things your father, uncle, or any other American who once believed that hard work equals achievement or at least getting by. 'Falling Down' also trifles with the many inconsiderations we as people learn to live with in everyday life. Whether it's dealing with an abrasive variety store owner that forces you to buy something from him to make change, or people who just won't let you get up and walk away without a fight the film remains true to its original, yet simple plight.

D-FENS is not the only person in the world who is suffocating in this environment. Ironically enough, his adversary Detective Pendergast played by Robert Duvall, shares his own version of this emotional unbalance caused by a suffocating marriage, job, and other individual injustices that life has dealt to him. Pendergast a last day on the job retiree notices the random number of events following D-FENS and is the only one who pays attention enough to physically link them. Therefore once again proving the old adage it takes one to know one. 'Falling Down' is an easy film to criticize, however for the crowd who seeks fresh and original ideas in film which is so desperately needed 'Falling Down' aims to please.

Off-Broadway Director brings Russia to Mahoney Hall

by Ken Provencher

After Spring Break the Off-Broadway Players will be staging Chekhov's "The Bear", Albee's "Counting the Ways," and the modern drama "The Eden Echo" at Mahoney Hall Auditorium on South Campus. This program will be the second set of one-acts performed and directed by UMass Lowell students, and promises to be the end result—as it was the first time—of low funding and terrific stress.

"Bear" director Chris Borden had more than money problems when he opened auditions for Sartre's "A Respectful Prostitute," his first-choice play. "We needed a black man and a prostitute," Borden explains, "and all the time I've been here we've never had any black actors try out...And I said, 'How are we going to do this? We need a black actor.' And everybody was kind of sensitive because, you know, we didn't want to seem racist, but people in the college system are kind of touchy...so we didn't put in [a notice] for black actors. We said, 'We'll just see who shows up,'...and, true to form, no black actors or actresses showed up...

"I started to panic...So I asked a guy on the bus if he was interested and he wasn't." Borden contacted Jacques Dessi of ASAO, but another Player struck gold on her own with a black art student. "She approached him and said, 'We're doing a play and we need an Afro-American male," Borden continues, "and the person responded...'You sound like a scared uptight white girl.' And when that came back to me I thought, 'This guy sounds pretty cool, I'd like to use him.'...In the real, professional world, when you're looking for black actors you say 'Looking for black actors.' You don't have to worry about being politically correct and sensitive, you know, everybody seems to be fairly well-adjusted."

The art class student was hired, but he and Borden lost contact during the first two weeks of rehearsals and Borden was forced to use "The Bear," his backup play.

"The Bear" features a pistol duel between an overbearing creditor and a young widow; Borden approaches such scenes with a light touch. "I have [the actors] playing it somewhat ridiculous because it's ridiculous. They're going to shoot each other over an argument about some money that she can't pay today and he needs it today. I mean, it's absurd...It's so absurd it's funny."

Borden is working to keep the play as Russian as possible. "I thought [the actors] should have Russian accents...Even though the set will be somewhat minimal I'm going to have [Russian] costumes and the characters are going to have Russian names. I didn't Anglocize them into American names because I think it has a certain charm...I want to be true to the author." Borden agrees that this poses certain difficulties. "I think the hardest thing is my main actor trying to get his Russian accent down. It was difficult for him at first. He sounded like Boris of 'Boris and Natasha' and I didn't want that. Granted, it's a comedy, but the comedy comes out of how the characters act; they're not comic actors per se."

Doubling up as producer of the series, Borden tries to improve the troupe's efficiency. "The first time we had the one-acts we didn't have one real producer. It was just, like, three directors, and things didn't go very well. Everybody thought somebody else was doing it." Although he dislikes the money-handling aspect of producing, Borden enjoyed the privilege of changing the way auditions had been run in the past. In an attempt to attract North Campus majors to the OBP, the Players held auditions on both campuses. "I was glad we did it...we got a meteorology major, a physics student, and a health major. We got a nice cross-section."

After many years with the Off-Broadway Players, Borden is uncomfortable with what he considers a recent change of attitude within the group. "It's very formatted [now]...To me, at a university, a theatre should try more individual things written by students, directed by students, produced by students, acted by students...where they do address subject matter like social issues, or, you know, politics, or what's going on on campus, or what's going on in America. I feel that's what a university should be about, not just 'Go to school, study what you have to study, and go home.'"

The Off-Broadway Players' second series of one-acts opens March 27th at 7:30pm and continues on April 1st, 2nd, and 3rd. Admission for students is $3; for non-students, $4. Mahoney Hall is wheelchair-accessible, and refreshments will be served during intermission.

Bookstore Committe funds available

The University of Massachusetts Lowell Bookstore Advisory Committee is organized to disburse monies for the purpose of aiding students in achieving an education and to advance the interests of the University of Massachusetts Lowell.

The Bookstore Advisory Committee will entertain requests from members of the University community to fund special projects and projects to enhance student life. Examples of programs funded in the past include the E.M.T.s who provide emergency medical treatment to the entire University community, the Escort Service and an AID awareness program.

Groups interested in applying for funds for special projects from the Bookstore Advisory Committee should pick up an application from the University Life Office. Completed applications can be returned to the Office of University Life in Cumnock Hall no later than March 25, 1993.

These requests will be reviewed by the Bookstore Advisory Committee Members. If eligible for funding, the requesting group will receive money in second semester.

Hoff Scholarship available

College of Management Students
Hoff Scholarships Available
Filing Deadline - March 25, 1993

The College of Management (COM) has a program to provide need-based financial assistance to full time COM undergraduate students who are permanent residents of Massachusetts. Financial support for the program is provided by the Charles J. Hoff Foundation which has pledged to fund up to a total of 50 scholarships.

The Hoff Scholar Awards are for full tuition remission and may be continued until graduation, on a semester basis, conditional upon satisfactory performance as determined by the College and the Foundation. The maximum length of the award will be for six semesters.

Eligibility (check to see if you qualify):

Undergraduates who are permanent residents of Massachusetts.

At least a sophomore in the College of Management during the award year (1993-94).

Minimum GPA of 2.7 from UMass Lowell courses with no more than 30 transfer credits.

Some evidence of financial need. For this reason, applicants will be asked to provide information about their sources of financial aid, if any. In addition, if students have filed a Financial Aid Form with the Financial Aid Office for the current year, the Scholarship Committee may request appropriate information from that office.

Recipients will be expected to assist the College in developing and enhancing its basic mission as determined by the Dean's representative. Recipients must also have little or no outside employment during any semester that they receive the award.

Applications and information for the Hoff Scholarship Awards will be made available in the Dean's Office in PA 305 after March 3, 1993. Students selected for interviews by the Hoff Foundation will be notified in May. Final selections will be made from among the students who are interviewed. The scholarship will take effect in the first semester of the next academic year (1993-94).

Lecture on relativity set for March 24

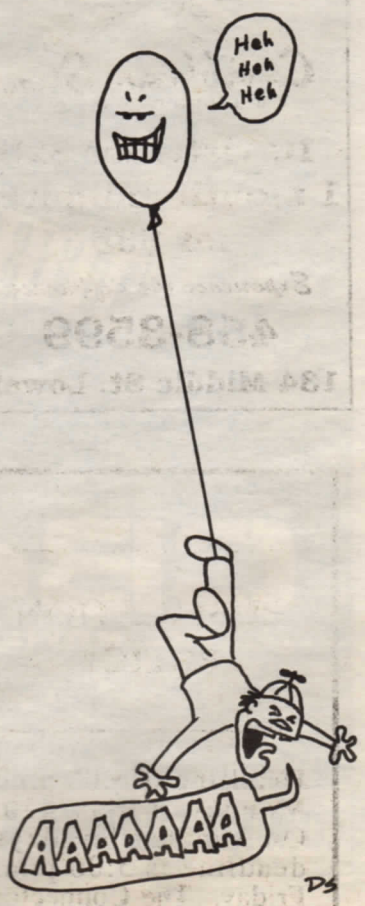

On March 24, 1993 at 4:00 p.m. in OH 150 there will be a special lecture on the Theory of Relativity. The lecturer is the renowned Professor Edwin Taylor from Boston University. Professor Taylor is the co-author of a famous book in relativity theory. He has in recent years developed pioneering computer demonstrations of the effects of relativity. These demonstrations will be shown at the lecture using the University's new projection system in OH150 North Campus. The lecture will in the most part be understood by a general audience and all are invited. This lecture is a part of the Spring Colloquia series of the physics department, colloquium coordinator Professor Albert Altman.

The Art History Club announces a day trip to the Metropolitan Museum in New York City to see a special exhibit "The Greek Miracle."

It will be held on Friday, March 26.

All students are welcome.

Farewell

My term as Editor-in-Chief is quickly coming to a close, and this will quite probably be the last column I write. I'm sure there are those who are all too happy to hear this. Whatever they believe - I know I have done my best to write fairly and thoughtfully.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank some people for helping me be a better editor. Thanks to my parents for all their help; they truly made me the person I am today. They gave me faith in myself and trusted me at all times.

Since my first night at the Connector, my predecessor, Geoff Pahl, began working with me; he took a personal interest in all I did. For this and many other things I would like to thank him. Also I would like to thank all the member of the Connector; you guys deserve a hell of a lot more credit than you get Patty, Tina, Damon, Erin and Pete all showed me that being involved in student activities could be heaps 'o fun. Thanks folks.

Thanks to Henry Lewis for giving me nearly all my quotes when I had the Student Government beat.

Thanks to Dina for showing me that there's more to life than newspapers and student activities.

Thanks to my English professors for learning me good writing skills. Special thanks to Professors Cogdill, Friedman, Hersey, and Roberts.

Thanks to that madcap bunch over at Cumnock Hall for all the material.

Letters to the Editor

Bravo to Student Government

In the words of Dan Rather, it's time for a reality check. Lay aside your self-righteousness and take a look at the facts. Between one-tenth and one-sixth of the population is gay, lesbian, or bisexual. That means there likely are more than one thousand of them here at U-Mass Lowell. They cannot and should not be ignored. You don't have to agree with their lifestyles, but you must accept the fact that they are out there and that they pose little, if any, threat to society..

Recently, there have been a number of opinions expressed here in the Connector crying foul in regards to the SGA's move against ROTC. Again, get off your high horse and take a reality check! Bravo to SGA! This university has had for quite some time a policy against discrimination based on sexual orientation. Ever since ROTC's existence, being directly affiliated with the military, it has banned gays in their service. Our university has been coddling ROTC for years by allowing them to blatantly break policy. Well, ROTC, as a promoter of discipline it's about time you came into line. Years of rule breaking are finally catching up with you. Either you give homosexuals the chance they rightfully deserve or take a hike.

Reality check number three comes from our slanderous friends somewhere far out on the right wing. Anyone who watched the Republican National Convention last year now knows that some right wingers, such as Pat Bucchanan, Pat Robertson, Jerry Falwell, and others have some notion that homosexuals are beast-like freaks of nature. Aside from the fact that California researcher, Dr. Simon LeVay, has proved that homosexuality is more genetic rather than some immoral, demonic lifestyle choice, we can also take a look at recent incidents. How about the U.S.S. Belleau Wood, a naval ship stationed in Japan? Airman Apprentice Terry Helvey has been charged with the brutal murder of gay shipmate Allen Schindler. Schindler had his ribs smashed, his head crushed, and his penis lacerated. Helvey was unprovoked. So, which one is abnormal and a threat to society? A similar incident occurred in Wilmington, North Carolina when three Marines entered a gay bar, randomly dragged a man out, and beat him. Granted, Helvey and the three Marines are not acting on the part of the entire heterosexual community. However, the typical homophobic attitude which permeates our society promotes such brutal atrocities.

Back to the ROTC issue; we must be sensitive to students losing the benefits ROTC provides. These students are innocent, and some may find themselves financially strapped without ROTC. However, there is another side of this issue. The multitude of gays, bisexuals, and lesbians here at U-Mass Lowell have suffered the same dilemma of finding financial support without the help of ROTC. This is an obvious inequality and the playing field must be levelled. The best thing that can happen is for the an on gays in the military to be lifted; then ROTC will be kept on board and homosexuals will be allowed equal opportunity to service. However, if the ban is not lifted...sorry ROTC members, but fact it, fair is fair. If one group of people is unjustly barred from participation others shouldn't be able to reap the benefits of service. It's tough to say we're willing to see students drop out die to financial hardship because ROC gets the boot, but that sacrifice has to be made sometime. The ultimatum has to be given to ROTC eventually, and that could cost this university some students. However, homosexuals have suffered the exact same financial burden for years. It's time to set things straight.

Finally, in a previous submission to the Connector someone mentioned that the ROTC issue shouldn't be dealt with by the SGA, because the SGA is supposed to serve everyone. Sorry, pal, the buck's been passed one too many times. ROTC has been granted free passage breaking our school's discrimination code for years. It's taken a national move by Bill Clinton to bring sexual orientation discrimination to the forefront. At this point in time it doesn't matter if the Sports Car Club is the one tackling the issue, as long as someone does. I'd rather see SGA rule against my opinion than not rule at all. It's about time someone faced the issue. Congratulations to SGA for attacking this tough issue.

Opinion & Editorial

Homosexuals today – Which minority is next?

I'd like to address the issue of gays and lesbians in the military and ROTC at UML. The purpose of the armed services is to protect us and our way of life. Certainly, nothing is more central to our way of life than our Constitutional liberties, in particular the guarantee of equal protection under the law. Yet the U.S. military has maintained an institutional policy of exclusion, in violation of these very principals. Obviously UML ROTC did not initiate this policy, but they adhere to and support it, and argue for its continuance.

Growing up in a Jewish family, I heard the story of the Nazi invasion of Poland. They came for the Jews. There were non-Jews who stood with the Jews, but unfortunately not enough. That is why I stand with my lesbian sisters and gay brothers when they are the victims of oppression or discrimination. We all would like to believe that we will never by the victims. But it could happen someday, if not for our sexuality or our religion, than for our skin color, or our ethnicity, or our political beliefs, or our personal beliefs, or something we can't even imagine. And make no mistake, if we stand with no one, no one will stand with us.

As a financial aid student with no family support, I can certainly empathize with students who rely on ROTC scholarships to defray the costs of their educations. I also think it's insulting to suggest that these students are so unresourceful that without ROTC they would be forced to drop out of school. One option might be to pressure ROTC to develop a program now to smoothly integrate gays and lesbians when the new national policy takes effect. The SGA might then be persuaded to reconsider its action. In the meantime, let's applaud the SGA for taking a courageous stand for civil liberty.

Letter to the Student Goverment

"Student Government, after a marathon debate, passed a resolution supporting the removal of ROTC from campus if the ban on gays in the military is not removed by July 15, the end of a six month waiting period imposed by Clinton." As a U.S. Army infantry Officer, and graduate of U.Lowell, I am profoundly disturbed by this resolution. And although this letter is addressed to those who are responsible for passing this resolution, I write it knowing that what I say may never occur to them. It is truly alarming to me that this resolution has been passed because of a homosexual student with "no great desire to serve in the military," who "insisted that serving in ROTC would be a way to 'serve the silent minority' of homosexuals who cannot join ROTC." I will give him the benefit of the doubt in his motives, but sincerely hope that this is not a "college cause of the week".

While I feel that freedom of speech is one of the rights which makes the United States of America great, I also believe that, in the case of the military, the rights of a "silent minority" should not come before the lives of the other citizens of this great country. Since Matt Drouin has "no great desire to serve in the military", I believe he has no great desire to see the gravity of what military service can mean. As an officer I train my soldiers knowing full well that even if my soldiers are trained to the greatest of their and my potential, there are many uncontrollable variables which may lead to their death in combat. I am an Infantry Officer, my soldiers and I are the front line. I only need to look back to past conflicts to see that death is a reality for the Infantry. The average length of a Lieutenants life in combat has been measured in minutes, and that of the Infantry soldier is probably the same. For this reason I do not want homosexuals in the military. Why would anyone want to take the chance of adding another variable which may in turn lead to the death of even one soldier, homosexual or heterosexual? Combat is complex enough by itself, why make it more so?

Those who are responsible for passing this resolution should look harder at this issue and ask themselves if it is worth it. They should also consider that a true soldier makes a pledge to Duty, Honor, and to Country, not to his/herself. Soldiers of the U.S. Army, heterosexual, and homosexual, serve their country not themselves nor "the silent minority". Homosexual soldiers who have served their country, while keeping their homosexuality a secret, have served like every other soldier, selflessly. They have not put their homosexuality in front of their pledge to Duty, Honor, and Country because they are soldiers. The "silent minority" or any other individuals who would put themselves in front of their country do not understand or belong in the military. It is selfless service that allows a soldier to put his/her life on the line for their country. If our military is to be successful in this time of military downsizing, selfless service is something we can not afford to loose.

Finally, although I realize they choose to ignore this, by fighting to allow homosexuals into the military, the people who are responsible for passing this resolution are adding that extra psychological variable which may lead to the death of a soldier in combat. Look into the eyes and heart of a soldier, who serves his country selflessly, and know that you have put the rights of a homosexual student with "no great desire to serve in the military," who "insisted that serving in ROTC would be a way to 'serve the silent minority' of homosexuals who cannot join ROTC" and know that your decision will effect his/her life. Consider that.

Secondhand smoke report affects U.S. campuses

By Karen Neustadt
Staff Writer
College Press Service

A grim report on secondhand smoke by the Environmental Protection Agency has armed non-smoking students, faculty and administrators with new information to fight for smoke-free campuses, a growing trend at U.S. colleges and universities.

The EPA report, titled "The Respiratory health Effects of Passive Smoking: Lung Cancer and Other Diseases," has confirmed what the medical profession has long suspected - that breathing secondhand smoke can be as deadly as lighting up.

"It's very alarming," said Timothy Hensley, spokesman for the Office on Smoking and Health at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. "The report provides ammunition for students and for administrators to strive for smoke-free regulations in educational settings to protect the non-smoker from hazardous exposure to secondhand smoke, which can lead to lung cancer."

Among the EPA's findings:

• Secondhand smoke is responsible for 3,000 lung cancer deaths annually among adults in the United States, and is associated with an increase in ailments of the lower respiratory tract, such as bronchitis and pneumonia.

• From 15,000 to 30,000 cases of respiratory ailments in infants and young children up to 18 months can be attributed to secondhand smoke.

• Secondhand smoke causes an increased severity of symptoms in children with asthma. The report estimates that 200,000 to 1 million children annually get sicker because of exposure to secondhand smoke.

"Only about 25 percent of Americans are smokers, so it is the majority of Americans who are victims of passive smoke," Hensley noted.

Since the EPA report, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton has declared the White House smoke-free for the first time in history, and corporations such as McDonalds and Chuck E. Cheese are experimenting with smoke-free restaurants.

Smoking was banned March 1 in nearly all California state buildings under an order signed by Gov. Pete Wilson, who urged the judicial and legislative branches and the University of California system, which aren't covered by the order, to do the same thing.

"Colleges should be in the lead, because smoking is lowest in areas where education is highest," said John Banzhaf, executive director of the Washington-based Action on Smoking and Health and a professor of law at George Washington University in Washington.

"People form attitudes at the college level," he said. "Ten or 15 years ago, they picked up the habit of smoking in college; now they are picking up the habit of not smoking."

Banzhaf counsels campus anti-smoking activists to go all the way to the president of the college or university with their demands.

"Tell him, 'You wouldn't put us in a building with asbestos,'" he said. "Tell him we now know that passive smoke is a class A carcinogen."

While many campuses have been cracking down on smoking for the past several years, administrators say the EPA report will most likely expedite even stricter policies than had existed before. Many colleges ban smoking entirely in classroom and administration buildings, while smoking and non-smoking rooms have been designated in residence halls.

At Iowa State University, in Ames, Iowa, beginning July 1, smoking will be banned in all university buildings with only a few exceptions.

Private rooms at the university will not be covered in the ban, although residence halls will try to phase out smoking completely over the next five years. But smoking will not be allowed in the Iowa State Center at university-sponsored events, including basketball games.

At the University of North Alabama in Florence, Ala., as a result of the EPA report, a resolution was passed by the faculty senate on Jan. 21 calling for a campus wide ban on tobacco in university facilities, and the elimination of its sale anywhere on the campus.

At George Washington University in Washington, D.C., a large area in the cafeteria that was designated smoking was just made smoke-free, and smoking on campus has been severely restricted to designated areas. A restriction on smoking in lobbies was recently mandated because people at information desks would be exposed to passive smoke.

After 18 months of intense discussion and debate, the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay, decided to go completely smoke-free last year. There is no smoking allowed in any building anywhere on the campus.

Had the change not been mandated last year, the EPA report would have decided the issue this year, a school official said.

"Of course, there are those who are not happy with that decision," said Ron Ronnenberg, Financial aid director.

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, a recent survey showed that 31.1 percent of men and 28.1 of women ages 20-24 smoke. There has been an overall decline, however, in smoking among people with some college education from 42 percent to 26 percent between 1965 and 1987, according to the American Lung Association.

The National Center for Health Statistics data says that smoking is the single largest preventable cause of premature death and disability in the United States and kills more Americans each year than cocaine, heroin, alcohol abuse, drugs, auto accidents, homicide and suicide combined.

Connecticut ban on hate speech dropped

College Press Service

STORRS, Conn. - The University of Connecticut has dropped a ban against fighting words in its student code of conduct because of its vagueness, officials said.

The section on fighting words "created a false sense of hope and expectations that regulations could be used to keep people from behaving improperly, which isn't true," said university spokesman Richard Vielleux. "It was a setup for failure because it takes out the educational component, saying that by inference, people could be using rulings to regulate behavior, and not education."

Vielleux said there was no controversy on campus about dropping the ban on fighting words, which had been invoked five times in the past three years. Four cases were upheld, and one case was denied.

"Fighting words" are defined by the university as "personally abusive epithets" that are "inherently likely to provoke an immediate violent reaction." Issues of diversity and intolerance are now taught in many courses and dealt with in dorm meetings, seminars and conferences.

"We're trying to teach kids what's right and wrong. That's what education is all about," Vielleux said.

Name of New Football Coach Announced

By Christopher Meelia

Thomas Radulski, the former defensive coordinator at Columbia University for the past four seasons, was named the new head coach of the UML football team on Tuesday March 9th, marking the beginning of a new football era here at UMass-Lowell. The announcement was made at a 1PM press conference to a crowd of over 50 people that turned out to give their support to the football program and it's newly appointed leader.

Radulski, age 37, had some impressive qualifications that set him apart from the pool of over 56 applicants for the position. A 1979 graduate of the University of New Hampshire, Radulski remained at UNH to earn his masters degree in public administration in 1983 while working as an assistant football coach. In 1984, Radulski took the defensive coordinator position at Hamilton College for a season, helping them to a 6-1-1 record, including a win over Division 3 powerhouse Union College. He then spent one season at Colby College as defensive coordinator and three seasons at Allegheny College (PA) as linebacker coach and defensive coordinator before moving on to Columbia University.

During Radulski's brief press conference he conveyed his goals and aspirations for the future of the UML Football program. "I want my players to excel academically, athletically, and in the community," stated Radulski, in an easy going yet no nonsense tone of voice. He gave the main points of his football philosophy, which were centered around 100% effort from every player, good physical conditioning, team speed, fundamentals, discipline - both on and off the field, and winning games "the right way." When asked if he felt the transition from defensive coordinator to head coach would be a tough one, Radulski responded "I feel that this type of positional change is a natural progression, and I don't think there will be any problems."

After coming off of a tough 4-4-1 season, UML football needed a jump start, and Coach Radulski could be just what the doctor ordered. Radulski now has several tasks on his agenda which include forming his assistant coaching staff, recruiting for the upcoming football season, and most importantly tending to his wife, who is due to give birth by the end of the month.

In closing the press conference, Radulski refrained from setting lofty and unrealistic goals for the team and proclaimed "Our goal is simply to win all of our football games." All to often coaches and players alike get caught up in the hoopla of winning league titles, receiving play-off berths, and gaining recognition, and forget what it all boils down to - winning. Tom Radulski, with his dedicated yet down to earth mentality, could be the crucial factor that puts UMass-Lowell football back on the winning track.

Lady Chiefs Win Championship

by Ed Morris

One point. A single point gave the Lady Basketball Chiefs a victory over Franklin Pierce College by the score of 56-55 last Saturday in the Costello Gymnasium. The win gave the Lady Chiefs the 1993 NECC Championships.

Franklin Pierce led going into halftime by the score of 27-22 and 46-38 at one point in the second half. The Chiefs managed to cut Franklin Pierce's lead down to one point with 49 seconds to go. Tension was building as memories of last year's 82-63 loss to Franklin Pierce came to mind to many of the players. Would this be a repeat of the heartbreaking loss or would the Chiefs be able to rob Franklin Pierce of their victory.

The whistle blew. Franklin Pierce had the ball. Their high scorer, Vicki Carlisle, had the ball, but missed her shot and gave Lowell the chance they needed. With four seconds left, Kim Brigham sank a 2-pointer and as the final buzzer sounded, the Chiefs had their win.

Brigham was high scorer for the Chiefs with 22 points. Other scorers were Ginger Sanford with 11 points, Darlene Orlando-Ciarcia with 10 points, Jen Morrison with 8 points, Dobee Baston with 3 points and Lakiska Phelps with 2 points.

With the NECC Championship under their belts, they now go on to NCAA playoff games. This week Bentley College is hosting a tourney in which Friday has us up against Stonehill College and Bentley against Franklin Pierce (who still qualify for the playoffs). The winners of each series will face each other Saturday night.

Lowell beat Stonehill earlier in the year by 18 points, lost to Bentley and defeated Franklin Pierce. There could possibly be a rematch Saturday night of Franklin Pierce and UMass-Lowell.

The games will be covered by WJUL on Friday and Saturday regardless of who's playing so if you can't make it to Bentley, listen and give the Lady Chiefs your support.

Come see Jeff Daw and the rest of the Chiefs go up against Providence in a two-game playoff series this Friday and Saturday in Lowell at the Forum. The winner of the series will advance to the championships next weekend at the Boston Garden.

Meehan To Play In Senior All-Star Game

Senior defenseman Scott Meehan (Walpole, MA) of the University of Massachusetts Lowell hockey team has been named to play for the East squad in the First Annual Shrine East-West College Hockey Classic. The announcement was made by the Officers and Board of Governors of the American Hockey Coaches Association.

The game will be played at the University of Maine's Alfond Arena on April 10 and is sponsored by the Anah Temple of Bangor, Maine. Proceeds from the game will benefit the Shrine Hospitals for burned and crippled children.

Meehan was among the 21 players, including five from Division II-III schools, chosen to represent the East in this game. The East squad will be coached by Brian Durocher of Brown University, Shawn Walsh of the University of Maine, and Bruce Marshall of the University of Connecticut. The West squad will be announced next week. All players participating in the game are college seniors.

"This is a tremendous honor and well deserved," commented UML head coach Bruce Crowder. "(Scott's) patience and work ethic have paid off."

A four-year letterman for the Chiefs and captain of this year's team, Meehan has two goals and four assists in 32 games heading into this weekend's home-and-home series with the University of New Hampshire. Meehan has played in 117 games during his career scoring three goals and eight assists.

Orlando-Ciarcia Selected District I Academic All-American

LOWELL — Junior center Darlene Orlando-Ciarcia (Methuen, MA) of the University of Massachusetts Lowell Women's Basketball team has been named to the GTE/CoSIDA District I Academic All-American women's basketball first team. The announcement was made on Monday, February 22, 1993 following a vote by members of the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA) in the region.

Also announced on Monday was Orlando-Ciarcia's selection as New England Collegiate Conference Co-Player of the Week. It was the fourth time this season she has earned this honor.

A computer science major with a 3.35 cumulative grade point average, Orlando-Ciarcia leads the Chiefs with 19.2 points per game, 10.4 rebounds per game, 53 blocks, and a .556 field goal percentage (194/349). The Chiefs are 19-5 overall (12-1 in the league) and she has led the team in scoring and rebounding in 16 of the 24 games.

"Darlene deserves this recognition because she is a dedicated student and she is having a great year on the court," said Chiefs' head coach Kathy O'Neil. "She also plays with great sportsmanship."

The Chiefs clinched their second NECC regular season title in three years with a 77-57 win over LeMoyne on February 21. Orlando-Ciarcia led the Chiefs with 33 points and 14 rebounds. She scored on her last 11 shots and finished 14 of 18 from the field overall. Including an 18-point, 13-rebound effort in an 85-76 loss at Keene State February 17, Orlando-Ciarcia averaged 25.5 points, 13.5 rebounds and shot .688 from the floor for the week. She shared the Player of the Week award with the University of New Haven's Debbie Moore.

Since 1990-91, UMass Lowell is 62-23 overall (.729) with Orlando-Ciarcia in the lineup. This season she reached the 1,000-point milestone (Jan. 6 at Bryant) faster than any previous player in the women's basketball program and is currently the program's second all-time scorer with 1,291 points. She is a two-time NECC all star with a .509 career field goal percentage and 8.5 rebounds per game in her career.

The Chiefs conclude the regular season February 24 at New Hampshire College. They will host an NECC quarterfinal playoff game at Costello Gym March 2. The Chiefs won the NECC playoff tournament in 1990-91 and made their first NCAA tournament appearance. Orlando-Ciarcia was the NECC tournament Most Valuable Player and was selected to the NCAA all-tournament team.
